1.3.1 Institution integrates cross-cutting issues relevant to Professional Ethics, Gender, Human Values, Environment and Sustainability, and Human Values into the curriculum:

Professional Ethics is imbibed to our students with a team of external expertise (conducting Professional competitive examination coaching) and by inviting corporate people/alumnae as and when they visit the institution. But during this pandemic phase department wise seminars were conducted and the expertises were requested to share the value of professional ethics as part of their lecture programme with case study reports.

Gender: Being a women's institution the issue of gender though not possible the management is having their own strategy to safeguard the complete safety and security of inmates. All the visiting men workers are handled in such a way that their attitudes and activities were congenial to the college system and culture. The students are instructed to be self-confident, self-help in nature and with selfless social interactions. Women cell monitors mend and mold the right features with the students amidst multifarious media based interventions, violences and discomforts.

Human values: The monastery people periodically pay attention to the students by way of their profused spiritual social cultural discourses inculcating the values of dharma, karma and human values. The students learn the human values by way of reading and recollecting the biography of Sri Sarada Devi, Swami Vivekananda and Sister Nivedita.

Environmental values: All the students admitted in their first semester read and experience the contents of the book on environmental education. Accordingly, all the inmates of the institution practice the values of environmental science by all means.

Sustainability: All the students of the final year UG, PG, MPhil., and PhD have to take their research projects on UNOs Sustainable Development Goal based themes and it is in practice and students reflect their sarvodaya and antyodaya value after their familiarity with SDG.

Value Education: The students of this institution read, learn and assimilate the values of Ramayana, Mahabharata, the Man Making Education of Swami Vivekananda with reference to values in education and education in values.
