1.3.1 Institution integrates crosscutting issues relevant to Professional Ethics, Gender, Human Values, Environment and Sustainability, Human Values in to the Curriculum

Professional Ethics:

With the help of a team of outside experts (who conduct professional competitive examination coaching) and by inviting business people and alumni to the institution as and when they come, professional ethics are instilled in our students. The students of our college underwent a Student Induction Program (SIP) at the beginning of every semester, in which cross-cutting issues like are discussed. In which the students were taught to develop their professional skills such as LSRW skills, resume writing, and mathematical reasoning. Department-wise seminars were held, and the subject matter experts were asked to include case study reports in their lecture programmes to highlight the importance of professional ethics.

Gender:

Institution being a women's college did not face any gender issues. However the management employs its own strategy to ensure that all inmates are absolutely safe and sound. All of the visiting male employees were managed in a way that made sure their behaviours and attitudes complemented the college's culture and structure. Students are given instructions on how to be self-assured, naturally self-helping, and with selfless social connections. Women's Cell monitors work with pupils to improve and shape the proper qualities.

Human Values:

Conducting spiritual retreat, narrating moral stories by faculty members, by reading and reflecting on the biographies of Sri Sarada Devi, Swami Vivekananda, and Sister Nivedita, the students learn about human values which add an inherent worth in usefulness or importance to an individual and these values illuminate the self-concept and serve as guiding principles for refining one's personality Students designed their group projects based on SDG goals that strengthens universal and global peace.

Environment and Sustainability

All the first year students read and experience the textbook on environmental education. As a result, every student at the institution upholds the principles of environmental science and practice appropriately. All final year students in Undergraduate, Postgraduate, M.Phil and Doctoral programmes are required to conduct research on UNO's Sustainable Development Goal-based themes, which allows students to reflect on their Sarvodaya and Antyodaya values after becoming acquainted with the SDG.
